

David Alderton is (and always will be) a geologist. He recently retired from lecturing but continues as an Honorary Researcher at Royal Holloway (University of London). His research output has mainly focussed on mineral resources and environmental geology, and his most recent publication role has been as editor of a new 6-volume Encyclopaedia of Geology.

He has always been fascinated by early Medieval history and this interest has been enhanced by a move to the local area and engaging with the Battle Abbey site as an Education Volunteer.
